Gen. Ludendorff is reaping the results of the cardinal error he made in thinking that the aillied offensives were bound to be spaced at wide intervals like his own. The cautinuity of the stracks has liberally dumifounded the German, and it is plain there is vacilating at grand German headquarters. The evacuation of the Belgian coast appears to have been ordered and then countermanded, which justifies the inference that Gen. Ludendorff is no longer guided by purely millitary considerations, either from the demoralizing effect a retreat on a large scale would have on the interior, or with the idea that the mora territory remains in his hands, the stronger will be Germany, position in its conversations with Washington. the refrest of all the enemy's locces.

The allied commanderinchlet seems to be applying that principle in France. The German front forms a rest sallent from the Escaut to the Meuse, the extreme point of the being at Anixy. Murshal Foch is attaching it not alone on one flank, but on both alternately, while he is prossing the center in the section between La Fere and Berry au Bac to prevent the enemy's heaking contact and slipping away.

At the beginning of the week, it was turn for left for the allied forces, which struck in the direction of Manheuge and Guine. Testerday, it was the right that delivered the blow, aiming it in the direction of Mexieres. Whether both wings break through or only one is immaterial. The result would be the same, and the longer the Germans resist, the worse for them. Every day adds to the wantage of their reserve material and, should they hold on too long, their retreat would become a rout.

Line Extremely Unstable—
The line is extremely unstable, however, and the German defences are described as mere acratches on the surface.

There seems every probability, therefore, that the alited drive will be resumed as soon as the suns and the transports exteh us with the advanced elements for a powerful posis at the improvised German positions.
